DIDD Initiates Accreditation Process

The Tennessee Department of Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities (DIDD) will begin in August the process of becoming the first accredited state system focused on intellectual and developmental disabilities in the United States. ...more

James M. Henry, Commissioner

James M. Henry is the first Commissioner of the Department of Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities (DIDD). The agency was formerly a division of the Department of Finance and Administration before the Tennessee Legislature established it as a stand alone department effective January 15, 2011. As Commissioner of DIDD, Henry is responsible for the oversight of two Developmental Centers, a statewide community based service delivery system supported by approximately 2500 employees.

Vision and Mission

Vision

Support all Tennesseans with intellectual and developmental disabilities to live a fulfilling and rewarding life.

Mission

Through person centered practices, persons with intellectual and developmental disabilities experience optimal health as a cornerstone for quality of life.

DIDD provides leadership and direction in a service delivery system that offers a continuum of services and supports so that persons with intellectual and developmental disabilities will be gainfully employed to their maximum ability, live in quality homes, develop meaningful relationships, and are part of the community in which they live.

DIDD is purposefully and systematically structured so that people are supported, quality services are designed and managed, and evidence-based practice is used to continue to improve services provided to people with intellectual and developmental disabilities and their families.
